The Sun Rises Again

Sad Shadows

Small issues, but yet important

The show sheds the light on human relationships and society's view of women, lack of responsibility and misinterpretation of romantic relationships, the rush of emotion and the marginalization the role of reason.

Drama/Social/Thriller/Romance

Summary

The story goes on to unfold a poor girl called Maram, who grew up in a dilapidated house with an indifferent father who lacks any sense of responsibility. He is always absent and when he comes back, he takes all the money his wife has that she is sent by her brother who works abroad. Under such bad conditions, Maram graduates from high school and joins the university.

Soon after that, she is shocked to learn that her mother is sick of cancer, which eventually triumphed over her leaving Maram an orphan looked after by her only friend Heyam. Later, Heyam's father falls in love with Maram, taking advantage of her weakness. She goes along with him at the beginning but then she comes to her senses and rebuffs him to become lonely again.

Years go by and Maram meets a guy called Safwan at a relative's place. A love relationship grows between them despite the problems they have, they overcome them and get married in the end. She discovers later that Safwan would like to live an ordinary life, get married and have children. She then decides to write her life story and give it to her daughter when she gets 18 years old.

Dramatic Plot

The series addresses some events which we live unrecognizably as we consider realities that are so difficult to change. It also addresses inter-human relationships, the way the society looks at women and how love relationships are usually misunderstood and misjudged.
